For Android: IG Spy (Free, For Android devices only); InstaFollow; PicInsta; Brandify; and Instiguise. Facebook Instagram has released a product called Instagram Insights to show how people are engaging with posts, profiles and advertising. The free Instagram Analytics tool generates a report that details where and how people engaged with your content, and offers insights on the quality of your followers. The app also lets you track the performance of your posts over time and compare your feed and engagement to your friends. The tool is designed to help you make more informed decisions about your audience, but it also does a good job of showing off Instagram's best features. You can use it to see if your uploads and hashtags are getting more comments, likes and followers, which is helpful for determining what you should post. Advertising The company also said it will roll out ads later this year that are triggered by your target audience. For example, if you are selling flowers, you might not be able to target all of your customers, but you could target only the people who are interested in buying flowers for Valentine's Day. You can also target people based on their locations and time of day. The tool can help you determine whether or not you want to run ads for people in that time of day. All of this information is valuable to advertisers. Companies use Facebook's tools to test how different demographics respond to different ads, and to determine whether people who have clicked on an ad have actually purchased a product. While the company has made some moves to encourage people to shift to the Stories format, Stories have not become a dominant feature for Instagram users. If you look at the engagement rate for photos, it's only 4% on the platform. As Instagram continues to add more features and changes to its feed, it will undoubtedly continue to see a drop in engagement. But what it should be concerned about is whether it can continue to grow into a platform that is as successful as Facebook and Snapchat. Instagram has made significant changes to the design and layout of the platform and it's unclear how that will affect its user base. While the company appears to be more interested in making money than attracting as many users as possible, it's important that it makes sure it's not missing out on the opportunity to change the way people interact on social media.
